

TOO BUSY TO ANSWER A FEW LEADING QUESTIONS, BUT--

Margaret Oswald's Monologue on Personality and the Difference Between a Star and Stock Actress.

"No, I am sorry, but I can not be interviewed today. I am studying my part for the next bill, and besides I do not feel like talking. If you want to go ahead and write something yourself, all right; but I really haven't a thing to say."

"What a wonderful personality you have. Did any one ever tell you that before? What a deep and absorbing study personality is. You know Webster says personality is that which distinguishes a person, but you will never know what it really means until you have studied the personalities of those around you."

"Things always go by contraries, don't they? For instance, some actresses make a great hit entirely with their personality and depend ever after upon that same personality to carry them through. Maudie Adams' winning, pathetic personality never fails to hold an audience, and Ethel Barrymore possesses what I call an elusive personality. May Irwin's personality just bubbles, and every once in a while it even boils over."

"The most popular comic opera comedians, such as the late Dan Daly, the ality. A player makes a hit in one piece, and invariably the playwright turns out a new piece for the star, which is cut, padded and fitted to suit the personal attributes which showed up in the former piece and which made the performer a star. So it is no wonder that the one-piece stars study to bring out their own personality."

"On the other hand, the stock actress works in entirely the opposite direction. One of the first things she must master is to hide her own personality. Why? Because in one play she may be called upon to portray the deep, passionate impulses of a Spanish girl, and one week later she may be cast as a demure, unruffled, soft-spoken English maid. If her own personality is suited to the pep-late Peter F. Dailey and Edie Foy, all made and held their places in the public favor entirely upon their personalities. William Collier is a comedian who would be lost without his Willie Collier personality."

"So, you see, stellar heights are attained and held mostly through personality, black-haired girl, dare she let it shine forth in the English maiden part? Can you imagine the incongruity of such a thing?"

"Yet, if the patrons of a stock company's productions were to be left at some opening performance of a new bill without a program and could recognize one member of the company upon her first entrance and another completely hid her identity throughout the entire performance, which do you think would be given the greater credit for a clever performance? It is really hard to tell, and yet I hold that a stock leading woman who plays some thirty or forty different characters during a season is more of an actress than the one-piece actress who stars on her own personality. At the same time I think a personality is absolutely essential to a clever performer. That sounds like a contradiction, doesn't it? Yet it is true."

"Webster might well have said personality is that which distinguishes a person, place or thing. For Mother Nature, too, distinguishes her creations by personality. Does a violet ever express anything but demureness and modesty? Does the soft glow of the sunset ever bring thoughts other than of peace, rest and quiet?"

"Indeed, places have their personalities just the same as persons. I have never in all of my travels seen a personality just the same as Hawaii's, as it is expressed by her rainbows, her liquid sunshine, her sunsets and her seas."

"It is very easy to say that Hawaii is so different and yet it is so hard to explain in what way. Of course, I have been in countries where there were rainbows and sunsets and showers. It is not that they are so different, but it is their personality that leaves the impression."

"Somehow the rainbows seem to give a real bonafide promise of the pot of gold and the colors in the sunsets must be blended differently. The reason I know about the personality of the showers is that this is the first time in my life I have ever been able to walk out in the rain and not think of my hat. Doesn't that prove conclusively that they are different?"

"The plants also have their personality. The scarlet hibiscus to me was only created to enhance the charms of some dark-eyed black-haired beauty and every leaf of the purple bougainvillea suggests royalty."

"Hawaii's sea has the greatest personality of anything here. If you doubt this just go out and take a look at some of its inhabitants and study the personality of each one. My, what a time the leading woman of the Marine Stock Company must have if she tries during a season to wear many of the different fish personalities. But to offset this just think of the costumes she can wear."

"Personality, as I said before, is—Oh, dear, there is my cue—I must run. Goodbye. I am so sorry that I did not feel able to answer some questions for your interview."
